

SPRING 2007

January

The Center is pleased to welcome Jonathan Malloy, Ph.D., our 2007 Canadian Fulbright Visiting Scholar. He is assistant professor of political science and Associate Chair of the Department of Political Science at Carleton University in Ottawa, Ontario. Specializing in public administration and legislatures, he has a particular interest in the relationships between state institutions and social movements. His current research focuses on the politics of evangelical Christians in Canada and their relationship with Canadian political institutions, funded by a SSHRC grant. He also has continuing interests in parliamentary reform and e-government. He will focus on his academic research as well as contribute to the intellectual climate within the John Hope Franklin Center where he will be located.

Feb. 21

Debora VanNijnatten, Duke's Canadian 2005 Fulbright Visiting Scholar will return for a lecture:

"New Environmental Policy Actors? Cross-Border Regions in North America."

Associate Professor of Political Science at Wilfrid Laurier University.

John Hope Franklin Center,

2204 Erwin Road, Durham, NC (Room 240)

Feb. 28

Jonathan Malloy

FULBRIGHT VISITING CHAIR IN CANADIAN STUDIES

Associate Professor of Political Science

Carleton University

Ottawa, Ontario

February 28 (Wednesday) at 5:00 PM

Breedlove Room/Perkins Library

Jesusland North?

The Christian Right in Canadian Politics

With a new Conservative government and pressures to roll back the legalization of same-sex marriage, Canadian politics seems to be moving closer to the red-state religious rhetoric of American politics. Is Canada the new frontier of the religious right?

March 26

Gerald Baier, Ph.D.

Department of Political Science

University of British Columbia

Vancouver

Currently on academic leave as Bicentennial Professor,

The Macmillan Center,

Yale University

"ANTI-TERROR LEGISLATION & RIGHTS AND THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA"

Monday, March 26, 2007

4:30 PM

John Hope Franklin Center

Room 240

Refreshments will be served.

His teaching and research interests are in Canadian politics with a focus on the Constitution, federalism and public law. He is a regular commentator on federal politics in national and local media. His past research has explored the role of judicial decision-making in the shaping of federalism in Canada, Australia and the United States. He is presently investigating how national standards emerge outside of areas of national jurisdiction in those same three federations.

Les Voix Humaines

Friday, November 3 at 8:00 pm

Goodson Chapel, Westbrook Building, Divinity School

Tickets: $15 General Admission

Susie Napper and Margaret Little have been thrilling audiences with their performances of exotic masterpieces of the 17th and 18th centuries for over two decades. The Montreal-based duo are renowned for their passionate performances offering fresh insight into music that is shrouded by the mists of time. Their program will include music by the two greatest French masters who wrote for the viol, Sieur de Sainte-Colombe and his brilliant pupil Marin Marais, the most influential gambist at the court of Louis XIV. French chamber music of this time reveals an intimacy in musical expression and makes use of a language at once moving and discreet, evoking a world where freedom and intimacy go hand in hand. Cosponsored by the Duke Centers for French and Francophone Studies, and Canadian Studies, DUMIC (Duke University Musical Instrument Collections), and by the French Consul in North Carolina