Promise and Perils: Governing Canada with a Parliamentary Minority, 2004-??

With the first minority government in more than 25 years, Canadians are dealing with the implications of minority government for critical policy issues such as maintaining the public health care system, implementing the Kyoto Protocol, redefining Canada's role in the world, and reforming the electoral system. This panel will discuss these policy implications and reflect on what we should expect as 2005 unfolds...

A wine & cheese (and possibly a Canadian beer or two, eh?) reception immediately following. We hope to see you!

A graduate of York University (B.A., M.A., Ph.D.), he is a specialist in Canadian foreign policy, North American political economy, as well as sovereignty and conflict in international relations. He is the author of Not For Export: The International Competitiveness of Canadian Manufacturing, (Third Edition); an editor of Canadian Politics in the 21st Century, (currently in its Sixth Edition, 2004); and an editor of The New Canadian Political Economy. He has also published numerous academic journal articles and book chapters. Williams has frequently appeared in the media in reference to his expertise in Canadian politics and Canada-U.S. relations.

The Triangle Institute for Security Studies and Duke University's Canadian Studies cordially invites you to attend a January seminar:

Jack L. Granatstein will speak on "Can Canada Wage War or Keep the Peace"

Tuesday, January 11, 2005 at the John Hope Franklin Center, Durham, North Carolina. Desserts and Coffee/Tea will be served from 7:00 to 7:30 PM.

The presentation and discussion will take place between 7:30 - 9:00 PM.

BIO: Jack Granatstein was born in Toronto in 1939. Graduate of both le College Militaire Royal de St-Jean (Grad. Dipl., 1959) and the Royal Military College, Kingston (Hons. B.A., 1961) as well as the University of Toronto (M.A. 1962) and Duke University (Ph.D., 1966), he served in the Canadian Army from 1956-66. He then joined the History Department at York University, Toronto, where he is now Distinguished Research Professor of History. Mr. Granatstein writes on 20th Century Canadian national history - - foreign and defense policy, Canadian-American relations, the military, the public service, and politics. He regularly comments on historical questions and public affairs through various media. His many scholarly and popular books include "The Politics of Survival: The Conservative Party of Canada 1939-1945" (1967), "Peacekeeping: International Challenge and Canadian Response" (1968), "Canada's War: The Politics of the Mackenzie King Government 1939-1945" (1975-1990). And more recently "Dictionary of Canadian Military History" (1992), "The Generals: The Canadian Army's Senior Commanders in the Second World War" (1993, 1995) and "The Good Fight: Canadians and World War II" (1995).

Canadian Studies was pleased to host a recent visit by a delegation of officials from the Foreign Ministry, some of whom came from Ottawa and others from the embassy in Washington and the Consulates in Atlanta and Raleigh. This group included Judith M. Costello, Political, Economic and Academic Relations Office, Canadian Consulate General, Atlanta; Christine Pappas, Consul and Program Manager, Canadian Consulate General, Atlanta; Louis Boisvert, Consul and Senior Trade Commissioner, Canadian Consulate, Raleigh; Dan Abele, Academic Relations, Canadian embassy, Washington, D.C.; and Nancy Hector, Senior Program Advisor, Academic Relations division, Foreign Affairs, Ottawa. They visited Duke campus and met with Provost Peter Lange, Vice Provost for International Affairs Gil Merckx, and faculty in the Canadian Studies program. They came to familiarize themselves with current developments in Canadian Studies at Duke and to offer the assistance of the Foreign Ministry in bringing Canadian visitors and programming to Duke.
